Right now the ASA has bigger fish to fry with all the cuts to grants and data collection being done by the current administration. It's also a bit too micro of an issue to the ASA. What might be worthwhile is to find a bunch of examples where journal articles and/or statistics textbooks offer the incorrect advice about two groups being ineligible for analysis of variance and then setting the record straight by citing the correct sources.

If you have a few citable examples of bad advice, let me know. I'll not really have time to look into this in any detail until the semester is over.

Hi Steve,

Hearty congrats on the manuscript. Nicely done!

Here's a link to the journal's open access page: https://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/page/journal/13652842/homepage/fundedaccess.html. The fees appear to be steep.

New question for you: Last week, I was at a meeting of the National Board of Osteopathic Medical Examiners (NBOME) where I was part of a group reviewing questions in biostats and epidemiology prior to their first, probationary appearance in a board exam. There were a number of questions dealing with the analysis of two-group clinical designs. In many cases, the answer options included both t-tests and ANOVA, with only t-test being marked as correct. I objected to this. The physician colleagues in the group noted that they were taught that ANOVA was appropriate for studies involving three or more groups. Review guides repeat this message. Ditto for textbooks (e.g., White, Basic and Clinical Biostatistics (5^{th} ed.)).

One member of the group suggested that it might be good to write a paper pointing out that ANOVA can also be used to analyze two-group designs (and within-group designs involving two measurements). Another suggestion was to have a professional group such as the American Statistical Association issue a statement clarifying that ANOVA can be used to analyze studies involving two or more (not just three or more) groups (or measurements).

I'm not a member of ASA, but perhaps you might be. If so, do you have any thoughts about the likelihood of getting ASA involved in issuing a position statement/paper?

Again, my congratulations.

Alan

Great! What are the fees for open access publishing? The link in this email is broken.

Dear Dr. Stephen D. Simon,

I am very happy to inform you that your manuscript entitled: Experimentation without randomized controls" has now been accepted for publication in the Journal of Oral Rehabilitation.
Thank you for submitting your work to the journal.

The referees have made the following comments on your manuscript:
Referee: 1

Comments to the Author
Thank you for your research in this important area.

Referee: 2

Comments to the Author
Thank you very much for this revised draft. This is a nice paper that communicates the value of quasi-experimental research methods to dental researchers. All of the previous comments have been addressed.
